In this Lunch Talk Barry Eichengreen and Rolf Strauch discuss global currencies, the international monetary and financial system, Europe, and the United States.

The conversation takes place as we are living in a more fragmented and multipolar world. At the same time, technological developments and financial innovations offer challenges but also opportunities for global currencies and capital markets.

The choice regarding a digital currency will reflect how citizens want to experience their currency. Safety and trust in currencies and digital currencies are key.

In this fascinating conversation aimed at a broad audience, Barry Eichengreen draws on his deep knowledge and broad scope of work.
